CCN Presents Student Panel

Tuesday, March 27, from 3:30 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. in 2450

The session will feature a panel of student volunteers sharing their stories of how factors outside of the classroom present challenges in college life. Outside factors that could possibly be discussed include varied home environments, various learning styles, finances, family situations, mental and physical illnesses, and perceptions that have historically been associated with "outsiders." CCN hopes listening to these students' stories and asking how we can be better prepared to meet students' needs will help us become more informed, compassionate educators who practice inclusion in all aspects of teaching and learning.

THEORY TO PRACTICE: HOW SCIENCE GETS DONE

Building an Instrument to Image Extra-Solar Planets

Though more than 700 planets have been discovered orbiting other stars, we have only just begun to be able to take pictures of these faint, distant worlds. Direct imaging is extremely challenging, but scientifically essential: images and spectra of an exoplanet will tell us what it's made of and eventually if it harbors life.
